PARALLEL SESSIONS

Note on Session Format and Etiquette

Chairs

All sessions have been assigned chairs. The chair's main job is to adhere to the time schedule. Please, do not change the order of presentations listed in the programme. Please arrive at your session 10 minutes early to make check the A/V preparations and that presenters have arrived.

Presentations

Every Presentation room will be equipped with a computer already connected to a screen to project your presentation. All computers are equipped with a USB port as well as Acrobat Reader and Microsoft Power Point. Presenters please arrive at your session 10 minutes earlier to check A/V preparations and load your presentations in one of these file formats already from a USB stick if you have not send it before to secretariaat@waddenacademie.nl

As a guideline, the following schedule can be used:

For 3 papers in 90 minutes or 4 papers in 120 minute: 20 minutes presentation +10 minutes open discussion with session attendees;
If there are more papers in a session, time will be reduced proportionally by the chair. As a courtesy to other presenters, all presenters are asked to stay for the entire session.

Discussion panel: Islands and scale: some shifting stakes of contemporary debate

Chair: Jonathan Pugh

The question of scale has always been central to island studies. Whether through an engagement with relational and archipelagic forces, the employment of fractals, or the prominent positioning of island studies within the Anthropocene, today questions of scale are receiving attention in new ways. What does the recent revisiting of scale raise for methodology, ethics and politics in island studies? In this discussion, Michelle Stephens, Elaine Stratford and Jonathan Pugh explore their recent work in this area, the different and overlapping ways through which we are rethinking the scalar and islands in the contemporary era.
